

ENGAGE PROGRAMME: South Africa

Union Rights, Policy and Practice: Training for Global Union Activists Training Programme for Participants from Africa, Asia, South and North America & Europe March – April 2017

Workers in both the formal and informal economies as well as trade unions are faced with rapid economic and social change. As yet, adequate regulatory and protective frameworks have not been found to meet the challenges imposed by the varying forces of globalisation. The current world economic crisis urgently requires the development of alternative policies and rules based on universal human rights, international social justice and democratic self-determination. However, to turn these policies and rules into reality a strong voice representing the interests of workers is needed.

ENGAGE helps labour activists and trade unionists to acquire additional knowledge and tools enabling them to take an active part in public debate and the process of policy formulation and implementation. The Certificate Course made up of six modules constitutes the core of the activities of ENGAGE. The cause of the decade-long decline in the wage share and the requirements for a wage-led recovery path will be discussed and analysed during the training. The participants will jointly develop strategies to enforce decent work conditions along cross-national chains of production and to regulate financial markets in a way that promotes fair globalisation and inclusive societies.

The topics to be discussed in the framework will include:

- Global Governance
- Global wage policy/finance
- Labour and development
- Society and development
- Trade union capacity building
- Practical research project

Target Group

Participation of labour activists and trade unionists from Africa, Asia, South and North America and Europe makes the ENGAGE training programme a truly unique international experience that offers new opportunities for global networking.

ENGAGE is part of the Global Labour University (GLU) network that has successfully established academic study opportunities for labour activists from all over the world at sites in Africa, Asia, South and North America and Europe with the aim of strengthening the intellectual and strategic capacity of workers and their organisations and foster stronger working relationships among trade unions. Courses will be taught by experienced teaching staff from the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg and other guest lecturers.

Practical Considerations:

Certification: Upon successful completion of the training programme, participants will receive a short-course certificate of competence, NQF level 5.

Classes: The courses will run from the beginning March to the end of April 2017 at the University of the Witwatersrand in Johannesburg, South Africa. Return flights should be booked for Saturday, 29th April 2017.

Research Report Project: A group research project will be undertaken during the last week of the programme and the date of this will be announced on acceptance.

Financing and Scholarships:

The ENGAGE Programme receives support from Friedrich Ebert Stiftung (FES) and International Labour Organisation (ILO). There are a limited number of scholarships for participants from Africa, Asia and South America. Not all who apply will be funded.

The scholarship covers the following:
